Performance over one year is annualized. The performance data quoted represents past performance and is not a guarantee of future results. The investment return and principal value of an investment will fluctuate, so that those shares, when redeemed, may be worth more or less than their original cost. Current performance may be lower or higher than the data quoted. To obtain performance as of the most recent month end, please call 855-280-6423. The Fund’s gross expense ratio is 0.90%.

The Fund’s investment advisor, RMB Capital Management, LLC, has adapted a contractual expense limitation agreement for each fund through April 30, 2021, reducing the applicable Fund’s operating expenses. This may be continued from year to year thereafter if agreed upon by all parties. In the absence of such waivers and/or reimbursements, the applicable Fund’s total return and yield would be lower.

This was one of the most eventful and interesting quarters we can recall in our 20+ years of managing portfolios. During the first three months of this year, investors digested the resolution of a contested Presidential Election, a riot on Capitol Hill, runoff elections in Georgia with national implications, the partisan passage of one of the largest stimulus bills on record, and a Federal Reserve committed to driving investors toward risk taking by committing to negative real interest rates for the foreseeable future.

In terms of the market, the quarter was defined by 1) an excessive investor appetite for risk, 2) continued small cap leadership, and 3) a violent rotation from growth to value. Safer, higher quality bonds delivered their worst quarterly performance on record. It is important to understand these factors, as there are implications for future returns.

Excessive Appetite for Risk

Two new investment species evolved and one endangered species flourished from the financial soup of excess liquidity: “Meme Stocks”, “Non Fungible Tokens” (NFT’s), and Special Purpose Acquisition Companies (SPACs). What each one of these vehicles have in common is the abandonment of fundamental analysis related to certainty and transparency of cash flows.

A “Meme Stock” is a stock that has gone viral online, attracting retail money seeking quick, short-term profits. Often these stocks are illiquid, which creates significant volatility. Perhaps the most well-known example of this new species is GameStop Corp. (GME), a heavily shorted videogame retailer on the verge of obsolescence. GME was promoted on the social media platform Reddit to create a short squeeze (force short sellers to buy higher). The GME story went viral, and the stock went from $3 to $300 in less than a year, bankrupting Melvin Capital, a hedge fund, along the way. Not exactly a great example of efficient price discovery, but rather an example of how manipulating liquidity by herding risk- seeking capital can drive the market-clearing price higher when liquidity is scarce relative to the capital trying to buy it.

“Non Fungible Tokens” (NFT’s) are digital “assets” certified as original by a blockchain token. This new investment species is now considered a rare collectible, like rare art. In the same way that an original painting by a famous artist is more valuable than a printed copy, NFT’s get their perceived intrinsic value from scarcity defined as a digital token authenticating originality. This quarter’s most famous example of investor appetite for excessive risk for NFT’s was “Beeples Collage”. Mike Winkelmann, a digital artist who goes by the name Beeple, created a collage of digital images of the first 5000 days of the internet (Beeple's Collage). Copies of Beeple's Collage sold for up to $100 per copy. This quarter, the NFT of Beeple's Collage sold for $69m at Christies Auction House.

Additional signs of excess market liquidity include the record number of Special Purpose Acquisition Companies (SPACs), where investors agree to hand over money to a "company" that owns nothing but promises to buy something really great within two years. A record number of SPACs listed this quarter. Some were sponsored by credible, proven sources, and create opportunities for companies to go public more efficiently, but many are more dubious. In fact, several were sponsored by celebrities with no track record of capital allocation, like Colin Kaepernick and LeBron James. Nothing against Colin Kaepernick or LeBron James. They are terrific athletes, but we think it odd that investors are willing to sign over a blank check to them to invest in whatever they deem appropriate, while accepting 20% or more future dilution. Many SPACs come with special warrants and redemptions, which could bring dilution up to 50%, and creates arbitrage opportunities for hedge funds to profit by fleeing original SPAC investors. There were 48 SPACs in all of 2018 and 458 in the first quarter of 2021.

The examples we cited are not the only signs of excessive risk taking, but, taken together, lead us to conclude excessive liquidity is driving investors toward seeking excessive risk, which may lower future returns.

Small Cap Leadership

With an investor appetite for risk as a background, small caps continued to significantly outperform larger cap companies. Not only do smaller companies carry more liquidity and credit risk, but smaller companies generally carry more business risk, and were fueled by expectations of a robust economic recovery that is taking hold. Within the small company Russell 2000 universe, the least liquid companies with the highest credit risk, continued to lead performance this quarter, as evidenced by the performance table below.

Investors are starting to look through to the other side, even though commercial bankruptcies were up significantly, and particularly in the Consumer and Energy sectors, where we forecasted a “zombie apocalypse.”

Source: Bloomberg; Data as of December 31, 2020.

Despite this fact, our thesis of a “zombie apocalypse,” where the highest quality companies would continue to outperform, has not played out as expected. In fact, it has been the exact opposite. “Revenge of the Zombies” is more apt, where the least credit worthy names continued to lead this quarter, as beneficiaries of the great economic stimulus and re-opening.

Our intentional lack of exposure to these lower quality names proved to be a headwind for performance this quarter, but, based on our research, we suspect it will turn to a tailwind as credit spreads stabilize and investor risk appetite normalizes.

Value Trounces Growth (finally)

Small Cap Value stocks (+21%) significantly outperformed Small Cap Growth stocks (+5%) this quarter. Small Cap Value stocks are more sensitive to the economic cycle, credit risk, and liquidity risk. All three risks were rewarded this quarter. As a Small Cap Core portfolio, we have approximately 50% of our holdings in “value” names, which contributed significantly to absolute performance this quarter.

Contributors and Detractors

“Value” names were the biggest contributors to performance and were concentrated among the Financials and Materials sectors, which we aggressively added to over the last 12 months. We are pleased that two banks were top contributors and that our positive thesis articulated in the 3Q2020 letter played out - “that banks would outperform in a “V” shaped recovery because they are as cheap as they were in the financial crisis, but with a fraction of the credit risk.” ServisFirst Bancshares Inc. (SFBS, +52.72%) and Pinnacle Financial Partners Inc. (PFNP, +38.01%) both benefitted from a steeper yield curve, increasing loan growth and improving credit quality. Steel Dynamics Inc. (STLD, +38.37%) and Eagle Materials Inc. (EXP, +32.62%) both benefitted from bullish quarters, headlined by strong pricing power, which mitigates inflation. Moreover, the stock market is starting to price in a strong cyclical recovery, given successful vaccine distribution and further fiscal stimulus, especially the infrastructure bill. Finally, American Financial Group Inc. (AFG, +30.95%) surged on the news of that company is selling its annuity business to Mass Mutual for $3.5B; we rank the management team as one of the best allocators of capital in the P&C industry, which is corroborated with this decision to unlock significant value for shareholders.

“Growth” names were the biggest detractors and were concentrated in Technology and Industrials. Copart Inc. (CPRT, “Copart”, -14.65%), a leader in vehicle remarketing services, focusing primarily on vehicles deemed a “total loss” by insurance companies. Damaged vehicles are increasingly being totaled, as the cost of repairing vehicles continues to increase. The company has built a formidable network effect in the U.S. and the U.K. and is in the early days of taking this playbook abroad and disrupting the inefficient process for remarketing totaled vehicles in Germany and other regions of the world. The company delivered softer-than-expected sales as a result of continued weakness in vehicle miles traveled, which we believe is transitory and will quickly reverse with the re-opening of the economy. Digimarc Corp. (DMRC, -37.21%) seeks to disrupt the traditional UPC barcode industry with its innovative digital water marking technology. The stock sold off as one of its main customers, Wal-mart, delayed the roll out of the technology. Fortunately, we sold one-third of the position at $50 (40% higher), so the position was properly weighted after large gains and we will stay patient here to see how Wal-mart and other early adopters gain traction with the technology as the economy normalizes. Other detractors performed in-line or slightly better than their industry peers and were simply caught up in the rotation out of growth into value.

Portfolio Activity

Previous portfolio activity has the portfolio fairly balanced between growth and value and we are comfortable with overall portfolio positioning. However, the violent rotation out of growth this quarter created opportunities for us to get involved in some of our desired “biotech basket” buy candidates, whose prices fell to levels where we determined were attractive entry points. We purchased several leaders in gene editing technologies including Intellia Therapeutics Inc. (NTLA), CRISPR Therapeutics AG (CRPS), BioLife Solutions Inc. (BLFS), and Editas Medicine Inc. (EDIT).

We took advantage of the risk-on market in January to opportunistically sell our remaining position of Tabula Rasa Healthcare Inc. (TRHC), given a compressed risk reward profile and less compelling milestones.

Outlook

Despite excessive risk taking in many parts of the market, our outlook remains cautiously optimistic and we believe that our quality bias and diversified approach are well-suited to address the real question for investors: How much good news is priced into current valuations?

First, the cautious part. The excessive risk taking highlighted in the first part of this letter is a classic signal for market tops. Additionally, the equity market is pricing in a robust economic recovery and valuations remain elevated on almost every valuation metric, except relative to bonds. Bond yields are rising and, at some point may rise to a level that triggers a rotation out of stocks and into bonds. Inflation risk is increasing. $5T in stimulus may trigger sustained inflation fears and force the Federal Reserve to raise rates faster and more aggressively than previously communicated. Finally, there is a higher probability of higher taxes for corporations and capital gains, which could lead to a higher cost of capital, pressuring stocks and multiples lower. There is plenty to be cautious about currently, which we believe increases the attractiveness of higher quality portfolios like ours that could potentially protect capital in down markets.

Now, the optimistic part. The economy is roaring back and we believe likely to grow 6%-10% this year, according to several estimates. After a year of being locked down, receiving trillions in stimulus checks and facing better employment prospects, consumers are flush with cash and ready to spend. Even more stimulus may be on the way, with another $2T to be spent on infrastructure, which could boost growth even further. Corporate earnings are rapidly recovering and may grow into their high multiples. Additionally, stocks tend to perform well in periods of modest inflation, which is likely, given stronger economic growth.

We don't know whether it will pay to be cautious or optimistic throughout the rest of the year. More things can happen than will happen, which is why we believe time in the market is more important than timing of the market. We suspect the riskiest parts of the market, where we do not play, are most vulnerable. Additionally, we believe our concentrated, efficiently diversified core portfolio of high-quality companies, spread across the life-cycle, may help protect capital and minimize the style risk associated with big moves in value relative to growth, thereby positioning it to deliver attractive, risk adjusted returns.

As always, the companies we invest in demonstrate high managerial skill in capital allocation, which creates value for customers, employees, communities, and shareholders.
